PORTA MAGGIORE, 2017-forthcoming May 2025, single-channel (180 min) and two-channel hd video (90 min). *View Project

Within a circle a triangle attempts to break free from a square: Told through the lens of a fable, the semi-documentary film follows a director's search for a story while he scouts exterior film locations in the suburban landscapes of Roma Est. His journey begins near Cinecittà, a once popular commercial film studio on the eastern edge of the city, and moves towards the eastern entrance to the city, Porta Maggiore, an ancient Roman gate formed by eight meeting aqueducts. As he travels cyclically exploring the potential locations, political, environmental and social situations in the form of stories are revealed, stirring personal struggles in the form of dreams to come to the surface. Anchoring the journey is the discovery of the central location of the film—Lago Ex Snia, a recent naturally formed lake and ecosystem created through accidental and illegal human intervention, located within an abandoned viscose factory complex. This encounter and the interaction with the community that tries to protect the lake against further commercial development ultimately changes the filmmaker's course, putting into question the limits of his craft, his identity as director and the nature of transformation.

Porta Maggiore is a five-part (Film Course, Film, Nocturnal Projections, Community Action, and Solo Exhibit) interdisciplinary art project, generated by the production of a film that explores the relationship between the built and natural environments of the eastern periphery of the Roman suburbs, known as Roma Est. The work is informed by a series of interrelated enquiries including an attempt to link the spectacle of filmmaking to the process of individuation; a search for liminal spaces of the periphery and the sense of alienation behind them; to question the forms of resistance and acceptance within the process of change; and the desire to find unity between the individual and collective in a supposed 'post-fascist' culture.

Performance—Logos Festival, Cosa Ex Snia, Rome, Italy, October 13, 2017. *View Performance

“L’immagine sparita” (The Vanished Image) is an audiovisual performance that reflects on the collective “commons” of a once revolutionary time and place and the process of its commodification. Combining spoken word, improvised music and live video mixing, the performance pulls from a video archive of Syrian peaceful activists who became self-taught image-makers.

SPIRIT LEVEL, 2015–16, single-channel high definition color video, sound, 31:38 min, continuous play. *View Film

Installation—continuous play on monitor, in Spirit Level: Virginio Ferrari & Marco G. Ferrari, CBRE lobby, 737 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, IL, USA, 2016–17. *View Installation

Peering through a tourist's lens, Spirit Level is about a search for the particularities of what makes a place sacred and the residual artifacts of a vulnerable state of being. Filmed in Jaipur, New Delhi and Koliyak, India, during the fall of 2015, I focused on recording three locations that contained or promoted a holy site. Each place is interconnected through the substance of water: the filtered water within the swimming pool of a five star hotel in Jaipur; the collected water within the step-well of the Hazrat Nizamuddin ki Baoli in New Delhi; and the water flowing between the low and high tides of the Gulf of Khambhat, where the Nishkalank Mahadev Temple sits one-mile out at sea, approachable only during low tidal shifts.

NACELLE, 2015, single-channel high definition color video and 16mm b/w film transferred to hd video, sound, 35:00 min, USA. *View Film

Installation—Single-channel projection on pvc screen, steel pipe frame with straps and ropes, 6 x 10 ft, continuous projection, in Nacelle: a video art exhibition, Blanc Gallery, Chicago, IL, USA, 2015. *View Installation

The word “nacelle” means the streamlined car of an aircraft—from the Latin navicella, meaning “a little ship.” In the film Nacelle, I traced an idea in formation and the complexities that arise within a contained space as a vessel travels from point to point, where a movement from thought to feeling is cycled through. The first part of a trilogy, Nacelle is about a fictional B-roll film crew stuck in the back of a moving truck that travels across five Chicagoland locations: the Byron Nuclear Generating Station; a DeKalb Wind Turbine Farm; the Cook County Department of Corrections’ Division XI Facility; Lower Wacker Drive; and Miller Beach, Indiana. As the line producer, camera operator, soundman, driver and the locations interact, the fragility of their relationships is exposed, and a reaction is triggered. Sound and vision question, concept entangles, the environment informs, and intuition drives the picture.

SURFACES: GRAND CROSSING I, 2015, single-channel high definition color video, sound, 45 minutes. *View Film

Projection—Single-channel projection, 20 x 40 ft., continuous projection, Saint Laurence School building, Grand Crossing, Chicago, IL, USA 2015. *View Projection

I was a resident Film Fellow at Rebuild Foundation's Black Cinema House from December 2014–June 2015, where I managed, co-curated and participated in screenings, discussions and events. The culmination of this fellowship was Surfaces, a community based film project that offered free video workshops for neighborhood residents. The film is a poetic reflection of the Chicago's Grand Crossing neighborhood made up of street images and interviews. I projected the film onto the Saint Laurence School, an abandoned building in the neighborhood, at sunset on June 21st, 2015 (Father's Day and Summer Solstice) where it looped continuously until midnight.

Throughout the years, as water levels dropped in Lake Michigan, a shipwreck off the Chicago lakefront was slowly revealed. I began to capture this object as the conditions around it changed. Resti contains digital superimpositions as I push and pull the horizon line, where the image seems fixed yet is in constant motion. Filmed over the span of multiple winters the material is reduced to a sequence of visual fragments.

I was aware of my implications as a filmmaker going to the Mediterranean island of Giglio, where Italian tourists travel for vacation and more recently to photograph the remains of a 'global' event. To me the lodged shipwreck along the coast in front of people who continue their vacations symbolized many social and political tensions currently present in Italy. On a more universal level, I wanted to comment on the excessive need we have to image making and the contradiction of my documenting.

SKYWAY, 2013, three-channel standard definition color video, sound, 22:38 minutes. *View Film

Skyway began an exploration in drawing out what was happening within and without me as I observed the relationship between a built and natural environment. I wanted to use the traditional space of the cinema theater in an unconventional way by fragmenting the screen into three frames, so that I could work spatially with the idea of distance. East Chicago is an area along lake Michigan connected to Chicago through the Skyway Bridge that crosses the Calumet River. It is an industrial area containing steel and petrol plants, historic neighborhoods and recently developed casinos—a place that was a major part of a chain of production and now part of chain of consumption. As I filmed from various spaces—river and port, hotel and casino, train and car, beach and golf course, industrial complex and bar—a thread of loneliness connected these places.

PARABOLA, 2013, single-channel high definition color video, sound, 26:24 minutes. *View Film

Cutting between expansive high definition images and abstracted close-ups, Parabola follows the ascent and decent of the natural terrain and tourist infrastructures within three places in the Canton of Ticino, Switzerland. Within these places I felt a sense of emptiness as I moved through the controlled natural environments, a feeling of being within nature yet completely removed from it, as if there was no room for myself within the curated landscape. While on these excursions I filmed mountains of the region through long shots of a massive cultural center construction site, where cranes in the foreground moved against the landscape. I also captured footage traveling up mountains with Funiculars to tourist destinations. During the editing process I began juxtaposing all three areas. It was through a dissatisfaction and disappointment of my habitual ways of filming where I began to push the materiality of the image. In manipulating the high definition footage by blowing up and cropping the image in the computer, the time and space within each shot was extended, giving me the possibility to look closer, scanning and abstracting the physical material of the image.

ATTRACTION, 2012, two-channel standard definition color video, silent, 15:11 minutes, USA. *View Film

Installation—June 5, 2012, two high-definition video projectors, four painted mdf sheets (84 x 42 x 1 in. each), silent, 15:11 min, loop, University of Chicago, Logan Center for the Arts (room 014), Chicago, IL USA. *View Installation

Installation—2012–May 18–26, 2013, two high-definition projectors, three steel sheets (120 x 48 in. each), sandbags, silent, image approx. 120 x 144 in, 16 min, loop, part of Sway: 2013 Master of Fine Arts Thesis Exhibition; Ferrari, Harris-Trevor & Somers, Logan Center for the Arts Gallery, The University of Chicago, IL, USA. *View Installation

Filmed in the Water Tower Place mall, I wanted to document a loop of actual movement in the world occurring in a post-modern space created for the activity of shopping. The consumer is observed shopping and becomes the observer within this work. Through medium and close up shots the camera movement is fixed and focused onto two locations: interior, within a glass elevator; and exterior, on various floors following the elevators movements. The materials of the actual environment such as glass, marble and steel are framed to create superimposed layers where bodies enter and exit the image. The final composition is split allowing for the interior and exterior perspectives to be compared—highlighting the loop of human and mechanical activity and referencing back to the mechanics of film and image reproduction.

Installation: projection on white canvas, 48 x 86 x 2.5 in., part of Nacelle: a video art exhibition, Blanc Gallery, Chicago, IL, USA, 2015. *View Installation

D(z)iga explores the HD format through one continuous extreme wide shot of the second largest dam in Switzerland. If the viewer remains attentive to the projected image, at a certain point a bungee jumper is seen falling through the frame. As time passes the figure reappears suspended in mid-air and is lifted in and out of the frame. Through framing, I allowed for time and an action to unfold. What was revealed is a symbolic figure where the convergence of natural and built environments conflict and bind the body's placement within them. The figure is disorientated, falling and then pulled against the immense backdrop of a structure that enforces our will over nature, now being re-used as a twisted source of accepted entertainment.

VELODROME, 2012, single-channel high definition color video, sound, 4:15 minutes. *View Film

Exhibition Installation—Projection on six vellum rolls, 20 x 3 ft. each, continuous projection, in Syzygy: 2013 MFA Graduates of the Department of Visual Arts at the University of Chicago, Bridgeport Arts Center, Chicago, IL, USA, 2013. (co-curated)

I wanted to explore the materiality of the digital image. A camera is placed on a bicycle that loops on a velodrome track. It was the speed, color and form of this movement that first drew me into the racetrack. By fragmenting the image with the computer I was able to suspend time while keeping a forward motion: joining and cutting; collage vs. montage; spatial vs. parallel are all editing techniques, which are brought to light and juxtaposed. The image is not a cell which when aligned to another in linear motion creates a new meaning, but instead one image is fragmented by horizontal cropped cuts of the same image. It is the movement and stillness of the one shot folding onto itself which composes a shifting duality—fragmentation and interconnectedness of a place within compressed and expanded points of time.

OPENING, 2012, single-channel high definition color video, sound, 7:25 minutes, USA. *View Film

Projection—May 11, 2012, single-channel, two high-definition projectors, north facade of the Surgery-Brain Research Pavilion, sound, image approx. 20 x 30 ft, 120 min, continuous loop, Surgery-Brain Research Pavilion, University of Chicago, Illinois, USA. *View Projection

Marco G. Ferrari, MFA Candidate 2013, Department of Visual Arts; Jared Clemens, PhD Candidate, Department of Computational Neuroscience. For The University of Chicago, Reva and David Logan Center for Creativity and Performing Arts/Office of the Provost Arts|Science Graduate Collaboration Grant. Faculty advisors: David Freedman (Biological Sciences) and Jason Salavon (DoVA)

Clemens (Biology) and Ferrari (Visual Art) explored the nature of neuroscience through a nighttime video projection onto the Surgery-Brain Research Pavilion (5812 S. Ellis Avenue). An audiovisual montage of original and archival materials relating to various brain processes, the project uses formal manipulations of color, speed, rhythm, and sound, reflecting the spatiotemporal concept of neural activity. A narrative examines the rift between scientists and the public, highlighting the complexity of the brain as both a subject and means of inquiry.

Director/Writer/Camera—Marco G. Ferrari; Executive Producer—Virginio Ferrari; Editors—Steve Cejtin and Marco G. Ferrari. Original Music by solo pianist Beppe Grifeo and Frank Orrall featured in the musical groups Poi Dog Pondering, Palm Fabric Orchestra and 8fatfat8.

“Drawing a circle is a process, a full circle becomes the result—the progression from a point to the same point with time making the difference. The attempt to move forward always brings us back. What has changed, what has remained?” - Marco G. Ferrari

The Italian-American sculptor, Virginio Ferrari, internationally acclaimed for his monumental public sculptures, is the subject of the documentary feature film Full Circle. Filmed by his youngest son, Marco G. Ferrari, for his first feature film project, the film explores his father's artistic career, from the early years in Verona, Italy through his four decades working in Chicago. We witness his personal drama on the eve of returning to his native Verona after thirty years of absence, for his largest retrospective art exhibit up to date. Full Circle will be informed by the intimacy and conflicts of a son looking at his own father. Ultimately, the film documents the role of the modern artist, in relation to the environments and cultures in which he lives and works.

FILM SCREENING/FILMMAKERS IN PERSON

The Root & The Bloom: A Map of Finding Home
 with Echaka Agba and Kristina Valada-Viars
 in conversation with Marco Ferrari
 Fri, Feb 24, 7pm

Two films by Echaka Agba and Kristina Valada-Viars seek and dream a home that prioritizes Black and Queer Liberation. The Root: Looking for Ancestors in My Father’s Garden (Coordinate 1) is a meditation on family meant to begin ongoing conversations outside of the details of daily life. Agba and Valada-Viars, partners in life and creativity, travel from their home in Chicago to Agba’s family home for a series of conversations around the concept of home with the elder members of their family now living in the American Midwest. Seeking information about relatives she never met, in a series of family gatherings and formal conversations in the summer of 2020, Echaka asks the adults who raised her about memories, values, and challenges in their path from Nigeria to the home they have built in rural Indiana. Part road trip and part experimental personal narrative, The Bloom (Coordinate 2) invites the audience to explore the meaning of home alongside the filmmakers and their family. (2020-21, USA, 40 min., digital video)

LUCCICHE

Ponte di Ferro is an independent association composed of artists, working mostly in marble, that began more than 10 years ago. Its focus is to create a collaborative environment, with sculpting studios for local and international artists to work on personal projects. As in past years, Ponte di Ferro is organizing a symposium on art, though for the first time concentrating on video exclusively.

LUCCICHE (shimmering), which the symposium event draws inspiration from, are random markings in stone, seen as surface impurities of Crystal and Quartz that shimmer when in contact with light. The theme therefore is of imperfection, an accidental quality that points towards the irreproducible. To the artists who are able to participate in the film screenings or mapping projections, their work should highlight the quality.

The outdoor symposium event is free and open to the public. The event is organized and sponsored by Ponte di Ferro and other collaborators. Every night, before and after the video screenings and mapping projections, performances and concerts will take place. The bar (food and drink) is one of the main funding sources that will help balance expenses, for that we ask you kindly to not bring additional drinks and food.

The symposium is divided into two programs each evening: Video Mapping Projections and Film Screenings. 1) The Mapping program is curated by Giacomo della Pina e Luca Afro (Studio System/Art). 2) The Film Video program is curated by Chicago based video artist Marco G. Ferrari. Guidelines and information can be found at: www.pontediferro.com where it is possible to download the submission material. Along with the Call for Submission you will be able to download the schedule of the video mapping and film video screening location.
